During the three and a half year period my wife and I lived in northwest Ohio we decided to explore as much of the state as we possibly could. For driving through a state on a major highway a simple roadmap will do. For really exploring a state and finding places that are off the beaten path, a gazetteer is essential. Everywhere I went I took my gazetteer. Time after time we discovered lightly-traveled shortcuts that saved us time and allowed us to really see the countryside. This is a great help for finding little lakes and ponds, streams and creeks, state parks, features of note, hiking trails, and the like. Also, it's a topographical map, which is especially useful in the hilly parts of Ohio.

I'm on my third copy of the Ohio Atlas & Gazetteer the others have worn out from all the use I give them. Based on the quality of the Ohio version, I just ordered the Colorado book for a trip I plan to take there. The Ohio version offers a great resource for not only accurate road maps of the whole state, but also other items of interest like recreation areas, etc. I have a copy in all my vehicles. Wouldn't leave home without it.
