You will learn:What's in your Massachusetts soil and how to improve itTips for extending your growing seasonThe plant varieties best suited to your climate How to deal with the challenges of hilly, seaside, or city gardeningWays to combat pests and plant diseases found in the stateLocal sources of seeds, tools, and hands-on assistance with gardening questionsIn short, how to succeed in your Bay State garden

Barbara Gee is a regional editor of People, Places, Plants magazine and a contributing writer on gardening for Yankee, Newport Life, and Cambridge Life magazines. A former Brookline resident, she received her master gardener certification in Rhode Island, studied with the British Royal Horticultural Society, and has worked in the department of horticulture at Blithewold Mansion, Gardens, and Arboretum in Rhode Island.

Barbara is obviously a very talented writer and she's created a no-nonsense, down-to-earth book loaded with information that is actually helpful. So many books provide little information that is truly useful, but her book is loaded with information and Internet links for more helpful tips.
